Wages have hardly altered at all. The present minimum in London is 38-5-; in 1848 it was 36s.; therefore, say the iron moulders, what is there for us to arbitrate about? There are employers, sometimes new men, who try to undersell the old-established firms by reducing wages below this minimum. There is no dispute. The iron moulders say, Employ whom you will; our terms are 38J.; take them or not, just as you like. 1 As far as I can see, there is no reason to suppose that this state of things will not be maintained. But though arbitration is not wanted in respect of wages, there are difficulties of a different kind, which a board of conciliation could remove by bringing employers and men more and more into contact. The iron moulders assert that in old times, when their union was in its earlier days, the employer was not so far removed from the men in his employ as is now the case. His life, bis 1 This is a perfect example of labour being sold with reservation of price. Thus, owing to two causes--one, labour s inability to keep, the other, the habitual poverty of labourers--labour is almost always sold without reservation of price. --Thornton on Labour, p. 75. Unless goods be offered for sale unreservedly, the stanchest believer in the law of supply and demand will not pretend that it can possibly apply. --Ibid. p. 56. position, his habits...
