Excerpt: . CHAPTER H. THE RELIEF. March of the Poles-- Junction with the Imperialists--Ascent of the Kahlenberg--A day of suspense--Scene from the heights--The morning of the battle--Descent into the plain--Advance of So. bieski--Rout of the Turks--Sobieski's entry into Vienna--Charity of Kollonitsch-- Behaviour of the emperor--Joy of Europe--Thanksgiving of the Church--End of Kara Mustapha. Sobieski and his army were on the borders of Silesia within a week from their departure from Cracow. His eldest son, Prince James Louis, the youth of many a hope and many a bitter disappointment, marched by the side of his heroic father. His queen accompanied him to the frontier, where they were obliged to separate; and the letters which passed between them during the remainder of the campaign form a singular and most valuable portion of the documentary history of the day. His march revived the hopes of Europe, and the malice...
