However, the writer is transparent in sharing her mistakes as well as valuable lessons learned on the journey to finding the right place of worship! Professional counselor and educator, Dr. Emma McCain, shares reasons behind why she made the decisions to leave certain churches in search of a place of worship that met her spiritual needs. However, in her decisions to leave, she has experienced mistakes as well as learned valuable lessons that have enhanced her spiritual growth! She hopes that her experiences will help others who might be going through feelings of bewilderment within the body of Christ or on the verge of leaving the church! What benefits or harm does this form of church shopping provide and how can the church help bring all worshippers to a place of belonging and Christian service! Dr. McCain is a Georgia state licensed and nationally certified private professional counselor. She is retired from public social services after 37 years of employment where she worked as a human services provider with the Georgia Department of Human Resources and as professional school counselor for all grade levels with Georgia Richmond County Schools. She is currently an associate faculty member in Sociology and Cultural Diversity at the University of Phoenix-Augusta Campus. She is author of Up From Between the Cracks: the Quest for Academic Success Following Grade Retention Among African American Male Students and an inspirational book, How to Recognize a Deadbeat: 101 Red Flags for Single Christian Women.
